This dissertation on the economics of Brain-Drain and more particularly on the operational feasibility of Brain-Drain tax is the outcome of many coincidence and lots of co-operation. The choice of a research topic, particularly at the M.Phil. level is always a difficult task. In my case, the selection of the topic was, fortuious in the sense that, I happened to read an interesting newspaper article on the problem excatly at the time when the search for the topic was under progress. I was instinctively lured by by the fascinating ramifications and intriguing implications of the economics of brain-drain. As a nationalist, I have a palpable bias for taxation of brain-drain. This dissertation is a systematically scientific attempt to justify my bias.

In my work I received constant guidance and encouragement from my research guide Dr. J.F.Patil. I consider it my fortune to have a teacher of economics as my husband. It was with his intellectual co-operation and practical logistics supplied by him that, I would complete a really difficult task in a seemingly easy manner.

My gratitude to Dr. Patil and Prof. Suhas Sahastrabudhe, my husband, is beyond words. I must express my thankfulness to shri. M.D.Dhavale, Librarian of Chintamanrao College of Commerce

Sangli, and the staff of the Libraries of the Shivaji University, Chintamanrao College of Commerce, Sangli, and Gokhale Institute of Politics and Economics, Pune , without whose co-operation, it would have been totally difficult to review the literature and to collect the statistical data.

Dr. V.B. Ghuge, Prof. and Head of the Department of Economics Shivaji University, Kolhapur was kind enough to give me time to discuss certain difficult problems. I remain grateful to him.

I must express my debt of gratitude to Prof. H.V.Joshi, and Prof. P.J.Tamhankar, Principal and Vice-Principal respectively of S.G.M.Kanya Mahavidyalaya, Sangli who kindly allowed me necessary flexibility in my time-table with a view to enabling me to attend my M.Phil. lectures. I thank Prin. Vaidya of Kanya Mahavidyalaya, Miraj, who gave me all encouragement in the completion of this dissertation.

I thanks Mr. C.S.More who typed the present dissertation neatly and in a very short time.
