

1. By this study model the company can process the actual data.
2. Gokul may follow the factors given by various reports. They may stick to cost factor so as to achieve required report for risk free it is necessary to follow stock control and other systems also.
3. To get previous data e.g. Milk collection of same date of previous year it can accessed from last year Milk collection file. This provision is made in the program but initially data for last year has to be entered.
4. Formats of documents supplying information is to be redesigned for simplicity of entering data to computer.
5. MIS department will generate various reports as designed in the model at their specified frequency i.e. daily, monthly, ten days and so on.
6. To implement actually all related departments has to provide data according to required period of time.
7. Management can use information generated through various reports to take decisions.
8. The organisation can process the actual data with present computerised MIS model.
9. Implementation of MIS model is successful only if all the departments supply the necessary data as per the formats given by MIS department within required period of time.

10. Management can use the information generated by various reports of MIS to take important decisions.