

PREFACE

Information has become an important resource in the walk of human life. Today information needed is everywhere for planning and control and decision making. The main distinguishing feature of a Management Information system (MIS) is that it explicitly provides information for management decision making. An organisation, irrespective of size and complexity has MIS for planning, monitoring, controlling its organisational operations. The present study has main focus on the understanding of MIS in Barshi Textile Mill, Barshi and its consequences in the contemporary computer era. The methodology towards completion of the exercise included a visit to organisation, interaction with data processing people and functional heads of various levels and reviewing the progress of computers in the organisational use.

For the purpose of research study the study is divided into five chapters which are as follows.

1. Introduction of Research study.
2. Profile of Barshi Textile Mills, Barshi.
3. Theoretical framework of Management Information System.
4. Application and Development of Computerbased MIS in Barshi Textile Mills, Barshi.
5. Summary, Conclusion and Suggestions.
